COUNTY LIBRARY

annual BOOK SALE October 2-9

Dear Community,

Last fiscal year, people in Transylvania County visited the library approximately 173,000 times and checked out over 350,000 books and other materials. More than 23,000 people attended library programs, not including the many community events held independently in our meeting spaces.

These numbers show how much the library is used. However, they can't really capture what happens every day.

Every day, parents of young children meet up for playtime in the children's area. Teens gather after school to work on homework, play games or spend time together. Unhoused neighbors find a calm place to sit and be part of the community. Tutors meet with students. Social service providers meet with clients. Distance education students find a place to study. Nonprofit organizations hold meetings. People come to explore an idea, try something new or find something familiar and comforting.

These activities may seem unrelated, but they have something important in common: people are sharing the same place.

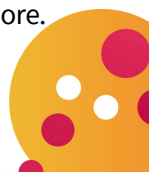

While I have always loved books and reading, community is truly why I became a librarian. Public libraries are one of the few places where you can encounter a genuine cross-section of your community. You don't have to buy anything or belong to a particular group. You don't have to share anyone else's beliefs or interests. You simply need to be willing to share space with your neighbors.

There is something powerful about that. We may come to the library for completely different reasons, but we occupy the same space. There is room here to read, learn, gather, work, play or simply be. We encounter people we might not otherwise meet and become a little more familiar with the many different lives being lived around us.

It can be easy to spend our time surrounded by people who think and live much as we do. I believe there is value in having places where our paths naturally cross – even if we don't agree or even interact, and especially when we do. I'm proud that our community has created a space where everyone is welcome and where there is always room for one more.

I'll see you at the library!

Rishara Finsel, Library Director
